Big Game Hunting In North-Eastern Rhodesia (1911)

Synopsis

Owen Letcher (1884-1943) was a big game hunter and soldier who served in South African. He was among the first of a new breed of African trophy hunters who appeared with the arrival of the railway at the Zambezi. A 1907 trip to the railhead at Broken Hill (today's Kabwe in Zambia) prompted the author to embark upon his first hunting safari into the little travelled but very rich wild-life area of North-Eastern Rhodesia, well known for its scenic and beautiful Luangwa valley. He then moved through North-Eastern Rhodesia to its boundary with Nyasaland and Mozambique, where he hunted a collection of antelope trophies, some of which are now considered rare. In the Awemba territory towards the Muehinga. he shot his first elephant. In the Lake Bangweolo area lechwe, lechwe and tsessebe were hunted, also pookoo, reed-buck, hartebeest, and a Crawshay's variety (Cobus defassa crawshai) of waterbuck. In the Tumbwa swamps there were the black lechwe. In British East Africa (Kenya) he introduces the reader to the Rift Valley and the Masai, Thomson's and Grant's gazelle, jigger fleas, the Uganda railway, and colobus monkeys. Further travels included Mombasa and Zanzibar, Entebbe, the Ripon Falls, and the mystical allure of the lower Nile and the Egypt of 911. And so his hunting journey ends as an exciting tourist extravaganza on the Mediterranean! His narrative is not only entertaining, but is also informative and vividly colourful.

Customer Reviews

I truly wish I had read this 50 years ago. As shortly after that I was given a chance to go to that part of Africa and if I had read this volume before then I would HAVE!!!

accurate and informative regarding local native cultures along with descriptions of flora and fauna

Entertaining account of a time that has long since past.

Great book on early Rhodesian hunting.

Good read. Not particularly exciting

Well written about hunting years ago in Africa!!!

Good history

its good
