PreS? Two board books that preschoolers will love, particularly when snuggled in the lap of a loved one. Each page is filled with a color photo of a tot responding in some way to the photographer. Toothy grins and yawns, bright eyes, pouts, and tears deliver reinforcement for the spare text that echoes what all parents (and photographers) say and play to get that picture-perfect response; e.g., "Look at the birdie" and "Peek-a-boo! I love you." Toddlers love looking at other children and these titles hold plenty of interest for them. ?Susan Garland, Maynard Public Library, MA Copyright 1998 Reed Business Information, Inc.

Pictures are cute but I expecting photos of faces expressing different emotions like "happy" or "sad" or "mad". The emotions in these pictures are ambiguous and tough to explain to a 1 year old.

This has been a consistent favorite. As a baby my daughter loved looking at the pictures of other babies. As she got older she would page through it on her own. Looking at real pictures of babies (not just illustrations) is something so many little ones love to do, but it's so hard to find in books. That makes this book (and the others in the series) a super find. She still brings it to us to read to her, definitely a big hit!! We've given it as a baby gift to several friends as well!

Cute, and my baby loves the faces. I'm not personally blown away by the quality of photography, though. Definitely like "Global Babies" better for its striking images.

not what I expected. Expected only smiling babies, since title is: Smile!

Grandson loves!

The story is really lame. There is just old pictures of babies' faces with barely any words. Pretty uninteresting overall.

I like that it shows babies of many ethnic backgrounds. I like that it shows babies with teeth, as it also helped me teach my baby what teeth are (leadinding into, don't bite with them!). I am not sure that the text necessarilly matched the expressions (the first page is "look at the birdie" but there is no bird in sight) which is why I knocked off a star.

Cute babies. My kid loves it.
