This atlas is attractive and easy to use. A "Planet Earth" section shows the earth in its Solar System; the location, size, and population of the continents; and the highest mountains, longest rivers, etc. Latitude, longitude, and map projections are explained, along with scale, direction finding, and symbols used in the atlas. Each continent is shown as it would look from space. This is followed, in the case of North America, Europe, Asia, and Africa, with physical-political maps of regions of each continent. Regions of the U.S. are also shown. South America it is not broken up into regions. There is also a map of Australia, New Zealand, and the Pacific Islands and maps of the oceans and of Antarctica. Inset maps locate the area being discussed in its hemisphere. Inset boxes for each country give area, population, capital, and other basic information. The same information is provided for each U.S. state. An extensive index lists all place-names shown on maps. This atlas seems to be accurate and up-to-date. Compiled in Great Britain, disproportionate coverage is given to Europe. The information found here is readily available in general encyclopedias, but a library that must get another year's use out of its present encyclopedia could use The Dillon Press Children's Atlas for current geographic information. It might also be a useful tool to teach the use of atlases to upper elementary and middle school children.
